The mets pitchers and catchers report 2023 event traditionally signals the start of the Mets' spring training, where pitching staff and catchers convene to begin intensive preparation. This year's report was held at the Mets' spring training complex in Port St. Lucie, Florida. The gathering focused on physical conditioning, refining pitching mechanics, catching drills, and team defensive strategies. The report also served as a platform for evaluating the health and readiness of returning players and integrating new additions to the pitching and catching corps.

With the Mets aiming to improve their pitching depth and overall defensive coordination, the 2023 report emphasized communication between pitchers and catchers, as well as mental preparation for the rigors of the season. The coaching staff introduced new analytical tools and training regimens designed to optimize player performance and injury prevention.

Key Pitchers Attending the 2023 Report

The pitching staff at the mets pitchers and catchers report 2023 included a mix of seasoned veterans and rising stars. These players are critical to the Mets' success, both in starting roles and bullpen positions. Attention was given to those recovering from injuries and new acquisitions expected to bolster the rotation.

Starting Rotation Highlights

The starting rotation featured established arms expected to anchor the pitching staff throughout the 2023 season. These included:

- Max Scherzer - Returning as a veteran ace, Scherzer's participation was closely monitored to ensure full strength and command.
- Jacob deGrom - Although facing injury concerns, deGrom's presence was vital for assessing his readiness to contribute.
- David Peterson - Emerging as a reliable starter, Peterson participated fully in drills focusing on endurance and pitch variety.
- Taijuan Walker - Walker's role as a mid-rotation starter was reaffirmed with focused bullpen sessions and live batting practice.

Bullpen and Relief Pitchers

The bullpen candidates attending the report were evaluated on velocity, control, and situational pitching. Notable relievers included:

- Jeury Familia - The veteran closer working on refining his slider and fastball command.
- Trevor May - Emphasizing consistency and recovery from previous season's injuries.
- Mark Vientos - A promising arm in the bullpen mix gaining experience in high-pressure scenarios.
