Overview of Moms on Call

Moms on Call is a structured parenting program developed by pediatric nurses Laura Hunter and Jennifer Walker. It gained popularity for providing a clear, step-by-step guide to establishing regular feeding, sleeping, and play routines for infants and toddlers. The program emphasizes consistency and predictability, aiming to foster healthy habits that benefit both babies and parents. Moms on Call is often praised for its detailed schedules that adapt as the child grows, promoting better sleep patterns and reduced parental stress. The program also includes guidance on developmental milestones and offers practical advice for common parenting challenges.

Foundational Principles

The core philosophy of Moms on Call revolves around creating a predictable routine that balances baby-led cues with a structured timetable. The approach encourages parents to follow a feeding and sleeping schedule that aligns with the baby's age-specific needs, helping to regulate hunger and sleepiness cues. Moms on Call also advocates for controlled comforting techniques to teach self-soothing and improve sleep quality.

Program Structure

The Moms on Call method is typically divided into phases, each tailored to different age groups, from newborns to toddlers. Each phase includes detailed hourly schedules specifying nap times, feeding windows, and play periods. Parents receive guidelines on how to gradually lengthen sleep intervals and adjust feeding frequency as the baby grows, promoting independence and routine adherence.

Overview of Babywise

Babywise is a parenting philosophy developed by Gary Ezzo and Robert Bucknam that focuses on establishing a flexible yet predictable routine based on the principle of Eat-Wake-Sleep cycles. This method encourages parents to create a consistent structure that supports healthy infant development and sleep training. Babywise emphasizes routine over demand feeding, intending to help babies develop longer sleep stretches and reduce nighttime awakenings. The program includes detailed instructions for parents on feeding timing, nap scheduling, and night sleep strategies.

Core Philosophy

Babywise is centered on the Eat-Wake-Sleep cycle, a repeating pattern designed to regulate infant behavior and biological rhythms. The approach aims to foster self-soothing by gradually encouraging babies to fall asleep independently within this cycle. Babywise promotes a balance between structure and responsiveness, allowing for some flexibility based on the baby's individual needs.

Routine Development

Parents following Babywise are guided to establish a daily routine that includes scheduled feedings and naps, typically structured in 2-3 hour intervals depending on the infant's age. The program advocates for consistent wake times and nap lengths while encouraging parents to avoid letting the baby become overtired. Babywise also provides strategies for nighttime sleep training that focus on gentle methods of encouraging independent sleep.

Comparison of Scheduling and Routine

Both Moms on Call and Babywise offer structured schedules, but they differ in rigidity and flexibility. Moms on Call provides highly detailed, age-specific timetables that prescribe exact feeding and sleeping times. In contrast, Babywise emphasizes the Eat-Wake-Sleep cycle, which offers a more cyclical and flexible approach to routine, allowing parents to adjust based on baby's cues within a consistent framework.

Structure and Flexibility

Moms on Call's schedules are often described as more prescriptive, with clear expectations for timing and duration of naps and feeds. Babywise allows for some variation, encouraging parents to observe their baby's natural rhythms and adjust the cycle accordingly. Both systems prioritize regularity but differ in how strictly they enforce timing.

Daily Routine Examples

- Moms on Call: Newborn feedings every 3 hours, naps following a set pattern, gradual extension of nighttime sleep.
- Babywise: Eat-Wake-Sleep cycles typically lasting 2-3 hours, emphasis on consistent wake times and feeding before naps.

Feeding Approaches in Moms on Call vs Babywise

Feeding philosophy is a critical element distinguishing Moms on Call and Babywise. Both encourage scheduled feedings but differ in how they balance parental control and infant cues.

Moms on Call Feeding Guidelines

Moms on Call promotes scheduled feedings with attention to hunger cues but generally encourages parents to follow the program's timing, gradually increasing intervals between feeds. The approach supports both breastfeeding and formula feeding, with guidelines to ensure the baby receives adequate nutrition while fostering routine.

Babywise Feeding Recommendations

Babywise recommends feeding on a schedule based on the Eat-Wake-Sleep cycle, often advocating for feeding before naps and bedtime to promote longer sleep stretches. Critics note that Babywise's emphasis on schedule can risk underfeeding if not carefully monitored, making it crucial for parents to track weight gain and hunger signals closely.

Sleep Training Methods

Sleep training is a major focus in both Moms on Call and Babywise, aimed at helping babies develop healthy sleep habits and longer nighttime rest.

Moms on Call Sleep Training

The Moms on Call method includes a controlled comforting technique where parents gradually increase the time before responding to a baby's cries at night, teaching self-soothing skills. The program promotes early establishment of bedtime routines and consistent sleep environments to encourage sound sleep.

Babywise Sleep Training

Babywise advocates for consistent routines surrounding sleep, using the Eat-Wake-Sleep cycle to reduce overtiredness. The program supports gentle sleep training methods that emphasize independent sleep but discourages prolonged crying. Parents are encouraged to be patient and consistent in helping babies learn to fall asleep without assistance.

Advantages and Criticisms

Both Moms on Call and Babywise have earned praise and faced criticism, reflecting the diverse experiences of parents.

Advantages

- Moms on Call: Clear, detailed schedules; helpful for parents seeking structure; promotes healthy sleep habits and parental confidence.
- Babywise: Flexible routine based on natural cycles; supports independent sleep; encourages balance between schedule and responsiveness.

Criticisms

- Moms on Call: Some parents find the schedule too rigid; concerns about ignoring baby's natural cues in favor of timetable.
- Babywise: Risk of underfeeding if strict schedules are followed; controversy over the emphasis on routine over demand feeding.

Practical Tips for Parents

When choosing between Moms on Call vs Babywise, parents should consider their baby's temperament, family lifestyle, and personal parenting philosophy. Successful implementation requires flexibility, observation, and sometimes blending elements from both methods to find what works best.

Implementation Strategies

1. Start with a basic understanding of each program's schedule and philosophy.
2. Monitor the baby's response to routines, adjusting timing as needed to avoid overtiredness or hunger.
3. Maintain consistent bedtime routines to promote sleep readiness.
4. Be attentive to growth, weight gain, and hunger cues to ensure adequate feeding.
5. Seek professional guidance if sleep or feeding challenges persist.

Frequently Asked Questions

What are the main differences between Moms on Call and Babywise parenting methods?

Moms on Call offers a flexible schedule with a focus on sleep training and routines, while Babywise emphasizes a structured feeding and sleeping schedule based on the eat-play-sleep cycle.

Which method is better for establishing sleep routines: Moms on Call or Babywise?
