Filmmakers experimented with visual effects and storytelling techniques to evoke fear and suspense. Notable early works include Georges Méliès' "Le Manoir du Diable" (1896), often considered one of the first horror films, and F.W. Murnau's "Nosferatu" (1922), which introduced a chilling vampire narrative to the screen.

Silent Era and Expressionism

The silent era was marked by the use of German Expressionism, a stylistic movement characterized by stark lighting, distorted sets, and exaggerated acting to create unsettling atmospheres.
