Therefore, the Attorney General typically lives in a private residence, often located in or near Washington, D.C., to facilitate access to the Department of Justice headquarters.

Merrick Garland's professional duties require proximity to the Department of Justice, headquartered at 950 Pennsylvania Avenue NW, Washington, D.C. As a result, many Attorneys General choose to reside in neighborhoods close to the city center or nearby suburbs with convenient transportation options. This proximity enables efficient commuting and engagement with policy matters.

No Official Government Housing

It is important to clarify that the Attorney General position does not include official government
