The Speaker: William Jennings Bryan

Biography and Political Career

William Jennings Bryan was an influential American politician, orator, and lawyer born in 1860. He served as a three-time Democratic presidential nominee and was known for his eloquent speeches and progressive views. Bryan's political career was marked by his advocacy for populist causes, including the interests of farmers and laborers. His rise to national prominence culminated at the 1896 Democratic National Convention, where he delivered the Cross of Gold speech that would define his political legacy.

Why Bryan Delivered the Speech

Bryan emerged as a leader of the free silver movement, which opposed the gold standard and sought to expand the money supply through the coinage of silver. He delivered the Cross of Gold speech to rally support for bimetallism, arguing that adhering strictly to the gold standard was detrimental to the working class and farmers. His passionate defense of silver as a monetary policy struck a chord with many Americans struggling economically during the 1890s.

Historical Context of the Cross of Gold Speech

Economic Conditions of the 1890s

The 1890s in the United States were characterized by economic turmoil, including the Panic of 1893 which led to a severe depression. Unemployment soared, and many farmers faced falling crop prices and increasing debt. The debate over monetary policy became a central issue, with two major camps: those supporting the gold standard and those advocating for the free coinage of silver. This economic struggle set the stage for Bryan's dramatic intervention.

The Gold Standard vs. Free Silver Debate

The gold standard meant that U.S. currency was backed solely by gold, which restricted the money supply and was favored by banks and industrialists. In contrast, the free silver movement pushed for the inclusion of silver in the monetary system to increase inflation and relieve debtors. This dispute divided political parties and the nation, influencing the 1896 presidential election and the broader economic policy discourse.
